> (Fourth Paper.) A day or two after the dinner at Lord Coleridge's London mansion I received the

"STAR AND GARTER HOTEL. "RICHMOND, 19th July, 1891, (Surrey.) "My Dear Sir-I mentioned to you that we should be at Warwick on Saturday next and at Birmingham the Wednesday following-on the circuit. If you like to see something of our circuit ways and customs I shall be glad to be your guide and host. I fear the capacity of the lodgings will not allow me to offer you bed, but we shall be delighted to give you board, and there are very decent inns both at Warwick and Birmingham, Warwick is an exceptionally beautiful and interesting place-full of fine things, especially the castle-and you will be in the very midst of Shakspere's country, whose name spell as above, but not on the road to spell it Bacon. I have come here to rest for the Sunday and to-morrow. I have to go into Kent to have a 'view' in a serious and important case being tried before me without a jury, I leave London on Wednesday, but a line to 1 Sussex Square will always find me. Sincerely yours,

"W. P. Fishback, Esq." Nothing could be more acceptable to an American lawyer visiting England than such an invitation, and I promptly anwe can slap mosquitoes without making swered that I would be at Warwick at the opening of the assizes. The judge on the circuit is furnished with a house for himself and family to live in during the sessions, and as Lady Coleridge, her brother and sister and her friend, Mrs. Barrington, were on the circuit with Lord Coleridge, the house was full. I found comfortable lodgings at the Woolpack Inn, where I got my breakfasts, taking luncheon and dining with Lord Coleridge and family at the Judge's House, as it called, a substantial structure designed by have them at these prices: Inigo Jones. The expense of keeping up the Judge's House is borne by the city of Warwick during the assizes. By an ancient custom the lord of a neighboring manor sends for the table of the Lord Chief Justice, when he is holding the assizes, a haunch or saddle of venison, and sometimes an entire carcass. When the gift is received the marshal of the Lord Chief Justice makes a formal and official acknowledgment, sending a simple "thanks" if it is a haunch, "thanks for the handsome present" if a saddle, and "thanks for the splendid gift" if it is the entire animal. It was a splendid gift this time, and the venison was good and well dressed. It sometimes happens that owing to political differences or personal dislike the donor and the donee are not good friends, not even on speaking terms, but this causes no breach of the custom; which has been observed from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. By another custom as old, whenever the Lord Chief Justice comes to hold the assizes in the Midland Circuit, Balliol College, of the University of Oxford, sends him a pair of immaculate kid gauntlets which he wears at the opening ceremony. Lord Coleridge and family arrived at Warwick on Saturday at 6 o'clock p. m. and the event was announced by the ringing of church bells. A corporation coach, attended by city officials and preceded by trumpets, conveyed the city's guest to the Judge's Lodgings. An hour later I sent a note to his Lordship advising him of my presence and soon received the following

"JUDGE'S LODGINGS, "WARWICK, 26th July, 1891 "My Dear Sir-I am glad you are here. go to church in state at 11, which is a piece of our peacock life you might perhaps like to see. I will see that you have a place with my marshal if you like to come here about ten minutes to 11. This afternoon I am engaged, but I hope you will come and dine here at 7:45. Lady Coleridge is most anxious to thank you for that beautiful little volume of poems (Riley's "Old-fashioned Roses," published by Longmans in London) you sent her. She would have written yesterday, but she arrived late from London quite used up. Believe me to be yours very sincerely, "COLERIDGE."

I arrived at the Judge's Lodgings a few minutes before 11 and found everything in readiness. The chaplain had sent a large basket of roses which were beautifully ar ranged on a center table in the reception room. And there was the Lord Chief Juscept on state occasions, and when the portrait painter is at his work. He wore the red gown with the long "tail," and about his neck and descending almost to his feet was a massive gold chain which was first bestowed upon the Lord Chief Justice i the time of Henry VII. His hands were encased in the white kid gauntlets-the gift from Balliol, his lordship's college at Oxford. It was an imposing sight to see the crowds of people on the streets making way for the trumpeters who preceded the corporation carriage in which the Lord Chief Justice, the Mayor and the chaplain were carried to St. Mary's Church, where the chaplain preached a short and sensible sermon from the text, "Wherefore, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." The building is a pretty piece of architecture, which was designed by Sir Christo pher Wren, the architect of St. Paul's. The church was crowded and the solemn service of the English Church was reverently attended to by everybody from the Lord Chie Justice to the "boots" from the inn. Ther is a democracy in the English churches which might well be copied in such New York, where the holders of the cush were a Digger Indian. Coming out after the tibule which were filled with bread. Lad Coleridge informed me that some charitable people in the time of Lord Leicester (Amy Robsart's husband) had, by their wills, set apart a fund to provide this bread for the every Sunday since then. Going back to the Woolpack Inn after service, I found there Mrs. Washington Gladden and her daugh ter, who were staying over Sunday at Warwick while Mr. Gladden had gone off to preach in a neighboring town, Leamington I think, and a few minutes after a messen ger came from Lord Coleridge with his private key to the garden and park attached to the castle. This gave me a privilege seldom enjoyed by tourists, who are excluded from the grounds on Sundays. Mrs. Gladden and Miss Gladden accompanied dars and beeches and along the banks of the Avon, which flows under the cast walls. Meeting the gardener, he conducted us through the graperies and fruit gardens. which showed the results of careful and skillful tending and gave splendid promise of profuse fruitage for autumn and winter. At the turning of an alley we came sudden ly upon a gentleman who seemed much surprised at our presence there. With perfect courtesy he asked us how we expected to get out of the grounds, which was, as we construed it, a euphemistic way of saying, "how did you happen to get in?" When i was explained that Lord Coleridge had kindly given to me his private key the gentleman bowed an apology, but told us that as the family were "in residence" at the castle he would request us not to go inside of the inner court, a very proper request, which was cheerfully obeyed. Nothing can be lovelier than a bright July day amid such scenes and associations. But as to all that see Badeker passim. It was late in the
